

The Triumph of Deliverance.

It is common to say that the most covert and malignant opposition to be met at Washington by the few but constant friends of the Government—defenders of its honor, and advocates of the supremacy of law in Utah—will be from certain professing "Gentile" officials, whose course while here, was but too notoriously marked by cringing servility to the tyrannical and despotic rule of the despotic and tyrannical Governor.

We know not what influence the gentlemen to whom we refer (and we give their names—Kinney, Gibbs and Irish,) may have at the National Capital, but we know that their policy and purpose are to oppose the Government, and we will not allow ourselves to shrink from the appearance of personality, to suppress what we conceive to be the truth, when high interests affecting the National dignity and a people's well being are even slightly implicated. The former delegate to Congress, from this Territory, Kinney, by his past course of servile subservience to the will of the enemies of the Government, and of human nature itself, has so completely destroyed whatever influence he ever possessed with those who have at heart the prestige and glory of the Republic, and he will doubtless be regarded as the paid lackey of the so-called "President of Utah," ready to do almost anything evidencing an abandonment of manhood and the renunciation of an exalted principle, to regain the lost favor of his master.

Against the cause so fragrant with hope for the people and with honor for the Republic, with all the force of his conscientious statements we have no fear of his influence.

The second personage in the "trinity of deliverance" marshaling for the defense of polygamy and the falling fortunes of the one-man power, the odious despotism of Utah, bears in his countenance the index of his character, the evidence of his degradation, the warning to all to beware of the betrayer of every sacred trust. When the consideration of selfish gain is presented. In him there is such a blank of manhood that his advocacy of any cause must be an element of weakness. An officer of the Government, yet while here, not only fraternizing with its enemies, but by his practices justifying their opposition to the laws, and confirming them in their crimes. From what we know of him we scorn his opposition.

The latter is by far the most dangerous of the trio, not because we claim for him superior ability, but because of his professed opposition to the tyrannical rule of Brigham, and because of his assumed wise conservatism, neutralizing so far as it goes every effort to destroy that tyrannical rule. While here what ever influence he possessed was exerted—not to aid the few who stood up man fully for right, and to enlighten and determine the policy of the Government with regard to Utah affairs—but to aggrandize the power and prestige of Brigham. It is with regret, but we must say it, that by his best friends he has been tried and found wanting. We have too long withheld a testimony which the cause of the poor oppressed and deceived people of Utah demanded, because of his christian profession, and because of the scandal that, in the estimation of superficial thinkers, might adhere to the hallowed name. We have waited and hoped, even when the most favorable opportunity presented, to find an indication of even the most weak and feeble protest on his part against the unchristian usurpation and heartless tyranny here dominant and defiant, but we have waited and hoped in vain.

We ignore not his christian profession; we reflect not on his moral character; we have exercised charity towards his strange, equivocal position, until charity itself is wasted. By his shrinking conservatism, as if wrong would adjust itself, or by his selfish, political aspirations that have blighted and cursed so many of our public men, we are forced to class him not among the friends, but the enemies of civil and religious reformers in Utah. The marked deference paid by him on all occasions to the so-called "President" of Utah, the social intercourse kept up between the arch polygamist and defiant violator of his country's laws, and the christian federal officer-holder, and the numerous consultations with him respecting the affairs of his office, all tended to exalt the importance of him in the estimation of the people, whose rule is an insult and whose policy is a crime against the Government.

The policy of the so-called "Gentiles," in their opposition to the Utah tyranny, was never rabid and unreasonable; it was always kind, but firm, compassionate and conciliatory to the masses of the Mormon people; stern and uncompromising only in its hostility to the purposes of their leaders. Yet no man ever did more to undermine it, and to cast odium on it, than Col. Irish. In his own peculiar way, of thick insinuations and of grave insinuations, whatever influence he possessed was exerted to defeat the policy of truth and of manhood, and to cast censure upon the staunchest and noblest advocates, who have for years of great peril and violence.

...most malignant and deadly opposition. Before the lamented Governor Doty was sold in his honor, the conservative Irish was endorsed by the Mormon leaders as the Governor of their choice, and every influence was exerted to secure his appointment. Happily, as we now believe, for the honor of the Government and the good of this people, their exertions were a failure; but their kindly intentions and anticipated favors, claim and will doubtless receive reciprocal exertions and favors. Against every thing wicked, and decided in the policy of the Government with regard to Utah affairs, we expect the Colonel's opposition; but it will most assuredly be met by men of stern and indomitable resolution, who have entered on this controversy, not as a mere pastime, or for political preferment, but from considerations of exalted duty, and who are purposed to overcome and to uplift the yoke from the neck of this injured people. If we are few in number, we have the consciousness of right, for our inspiration, and the eternal forces of principle for our reserve, and we are certain of victory. We bide our time.

Driftings from the Plains.

BY EDWARD B. HEATON.

NUMBER XII.

"Sir," said he, "a desire of knowledge is the natural feeling of mankind; and every human being, whose mind is not debauched, will be willing to give all that he has to get knowledge."

—Boswell's Life of Johnson.

Believing that human nature is the same to-day as when Johnson and "Bozzy" took the ride on the Thames, during which the above quotation was elicited, I have endeavored, thus far, to delineate the impressions made upon my mind by the country over which I have conducted my readers, in such a manner as to give them a general knowledge of its features, botanical, geological and physical. Neither have I forgotten the military adjuncts of our narration, having given the details as truthfully as could be done, for I had every facility for so doing.

Were I to imitate the general style of newspaper correspondents, I should, by extravagant comparisons, seek to dazzle the reader's imagination, and make of our commanding General a Walenstein, a Napoleon, a Grant, or, at least, describe him as far eclipsing Cortez and all other warriors who became notorious as Indian conquerors; but I will not. All American soldiers are likewise citizens, and the best only do their duty to our common country when they exercise all their talents in its service. But I should not do common justice to Gen. Connor did I not state that this expedition on his part was ably conducted and uniformly successful. Incessantly in the saddle, he personally superintended the breaking up of each camp, and the marching and camping of the command. He was, too, his own engineer, frequently laboring with his own hands in making a safe transit for the train over the numerous gullies and ravines that it was necessary to cross. His courage is undoubted, and his success as an Indian fighter unquestionable. The Snake or Shoshone nation that he chastised on the banks of Bear River in 1860, and now the Arapahoes, will testify to this trait of the General's. He is directly from the people, having fifteen years ago carried a musket in the regular service. His scholastic attainments are not extensive, but his knowledge on practical subjects connected with the profession of a soldier, is thorough, and from close observation and contact with all the phases of life he has become eminently conversant with those things that always contribute to make their possessors men of mark. His judgment on military matters, among his acquaintances, is always deferred to, for he has made this a specialty. The Mormons, while they hate him, as they do all men whom the Government places as warriors over them, keep their hatred to themselves, for Gen. Connor never jokes; and the cannon which he has placed in position on the esplanade of Camp Douglas, and which commands Salt Lake City, mean destruction to Mormons at the first host demonstration on the part of the prophet Brigham.

While in camp (September 4th) at the mouth of Pumpkin Creek, an eastern tributary of Tongue River, in a splendid grove of ash and cottonwood, two men from Colonel Sawyer overtook us. These men reported his train on the head waters of the river controlled by the Arapahoes, and their mission was for reinforcements. They likewise reported that in a conference held in Col. Sawyer's camp he had seized ten of their principal men and placed them in confinement as hostages—that three men belonging to the train were killed, one of whom was Captain Cole, commanding their escort of Michigan cavalry, and that appearances indicated the Indians to be mustering reinforcements. This information was an aggravation. Our force was small, and with the present uncertainty respecting the other columns, and ignorance of what might be in the shape of hostile Indians at the foot of the river, Gen. Connor was in an unpleasant situation. However, he determined to send a company in advance, under the guidance of a friendly Arapahoe, which according to our calculation could not be above forty miles distant.

Gen. Connor at once started two companies to the relief of Col. Sawyer. We will not bid good-by to this adventurous expedition. The reinforcements reached them in season. Found the Indians peaceable, and escorted the train to the west bank of Big Horn River.

Captain Marshall reported that the country on the ridge between Tongue and Powder rivers, was entirely destitute of grass. "Even the game," he said, "were thin and looked hungry;" and that it was not possible to subsist the animals any farther down the river. He had followed Tongue River to its confluence with the Yellowstone, which he found to be a broad and rapid stream, navigable for boats of considerable burthen. Its valley, though wide and densely wooded, afforded no pasture, and there were no indications of either white man or savage having been in that locality for years.

All down Tongue River, as far as the column marched, Indian signs, but a few miles had been very numerous. Captain Marshall stated that they were about a mile below camp, and a large trail led over in the direction of Powder River. These Indians must have owned a large herd of stock, for the cottonwoods, peeled all the way down the river, showed the grass insufficient to support them. Cottonwood bark is in these prairie regions the only substitute for grass. Horses, mules and cattle eat the fleshy side of it voraciously. Frequently here this is the only dependence of animals. It is not unusual to make regular details of soldiers to procure this bark, and it is issued like forage.

On the receipt of Captain Marshall's report Gen. Connor decided to return up the river. Accordingly he retraced our route to the mouth of a creek, named "Bosnia Creek," flowing into the river from the east side, and about six miles from the Yellowstone. Here efforts were again made to learn the whereabouts of Col. Cole. Captain North with his Pawnee was sent to Powder River, and Captain Humphreys with a detachment of Ohio cavalry, was sent westward to Rosebud River. They both started in a heavy rain, the first we had experienced, and which increased and fell for three days. Our camp became flooded, and the river rose. The weather turned quite chilly, but the stock improved on the grass, which here was excellent. On the fourth morning the rain ceased and the two ascent detachments returned. Capt. Humphreys had experienced a severe snow-storm on Rosebud, which he found to be a river nearly as large as Tongue River, rapid and deep, but with no sign of human being, red or white.

Captain North had reached Powder River and found distressing indications of the column so anxiously sought after. The point where he struck the stream had evidently been the site of a camp. Lying in ranks, shot through the head, were upward of five hundred cavalry horses. They appeared as if they had been tied to picket ropes and shot while lying down. Close by were indications of the burning up of a large quantity of saddles and other furniture of the same description, besides wagons. But the worst sight of all were signs that showed beyond a doubt that the soldiers were harrowed, and an insistent on mile met. Captain North endeavored to follow on the trail of the column, but found himself intercepted by a large body of savages, and he was compelled to return in haste to our camp.

Gen. Connor without a moment's delay hastened up the river. The same evening three scouts were sent over towards Powder River, with the hope that three men would succeed in eluding the savages, and communication be opened with Col. Cole; but on the following evening they overtook us, having found it impossible to elude the vigilance of the Cheyennes, who were hanging on the rear of the retreating column, like wolves on a wounded buffalo.

BY PACIFIC TELEGRAPH.

[SPECIAL TO THE DAILY UNION VERETTE.]

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

Washington, Jan. 18.

Mr. Morgan, from the Committee of Commerce reported without amendment the House bill to extend the time for the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouses, and public stores, also the bill to construct a telegraph line between New York and the West Indies. A joint resolution was reported for discharging the writings of Madison among the States and Governmental departments. A bill for the admission of Colorado, as a State was reported.

Howe's joint resolution for the appointment of provisional Governors in southern States was taken up.

Mr. Smith addressed the Senate at length. He said that the reconstruction policy of President Johnson, opposed negro suffrage, and advocated a generous policy towards the South. Mr. Wade followed and argued against admitting southern States at present. At the conclusion of Wade's speech, a bill enlarging the powers of the Freedmen's Bureau was taken up. An amendment was offered limiting titles to land given negroes by Sherman to three years. A bill giving the widow of President Lincoln the franking privilege for life was passed.

Mr. Wilson introduced a bill to amend the act of incorporation of the Freedmen's Trust Co., so as to authorize the Secretary of Treasury to designate that institution, or any of its branches as depositories of any money belonging to freedmen in the hands of or under the control of any civil or military officer of the U. S., and to direct that such money be so deposited with the company, in all things conforming to the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury. It was referred to Committee on Finance. Senate adjourned.

The Senate in Executive Session, confirmed the following nominations: Robert B. Van Vleet, Brig. Gen., resident of the U. S. President in Japan; Earl Bill U. S. Marshall for the northern district of Idaho; James H. Alvord, of Idaho Territory. U. S. Marshall for the southern district of Idaho, recently representative.

Mr. Bidwell introduced a bill granting lands to aid the construction of a R. R. and Telegraph line from the Central Pacific R. R. in California, to Portland, Oregon, which probably will soon be favorably reported on by a select committee on the Pacific R. R. The bill also authorizes the Puget Sound and Columbia River R. R. Company to construct a road to unite with others on the Pacific Coast. The usual grants of lands and other privileges are conferred.

HOUSE.

Jenks, of Rhode Island, reported a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States. Made the special order for the 30th inst.

Lynch, of Maine, offered a resolution that all vessels placed under a foreign flag or a foreign register during the late war, should be treated as foreign; but that the vessels never again shall be allowed an American register. Referred to the Committee on Commerce. He also introduced a resolution which was adopted, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the House how many vessels had been allowed new registers. The House resumed the consideration of the suffrage bill for the District of Columbia. After debate, a motion to lay the bill on the table was lost by a vote of 46 yeas against 120 nays. The suffrage bill passed the House without any qualifications, by 116 yeas.
